

respond to that inquiry. By making it a public record, the Department of Banking will be able to say, yes, let me tell you about company X. We've had 15 complaints filed on them in the last year and a half, and 12 of those files are still open, and no resolution of the consumers' complaint has been arrived at that we know of, or they might say, in fact, we've had two complaints over the last ten years, and both of those complaints were speedily taken care of by the company. That kind of positive or valuable consumer information is something the department would like to do. That change is made in 217; I'd urge the advancement of LB 217.
